

Producing enterprising and employable students

The development of students' enterprise and employability was a key priority in the 2012 BIS report 'Following up the Wilson Review of Business – University Collaboration'.

Although the importance of developing the practical aspects of enterprise and employability was highlighted there are considerable practical difficulties involved in actually achieving this across an HE institution.

Bibby Rumbelow can help.

Planning and delivering sustainable enterprise and employability projects involving employers can be difficult to achieve. Bibby Rumbelow's team is experienced in setting up successful enterprise and employability activities in universities that not only integrate with and strengthen learning and teaching, but also develop the systems, cultures and confidences of those involved. We can help you by:

- reviewing and designing the curriculum with you to accommodate and recognise enterprise and employability skills and meet your academic quality standards
- preparing an enterprise scheme including identifying and engaging employers, as well as supporting you to accredit and approve students' learning and experience
- developing academic staff and support systems to ensure high quality delivery and professional standards are maintained
- producing business plans for student enterprise ensuring continuing financial sustainability
